GENERAL STORE

FISHING BRIDGE

- Built in 1937, the existing bridge was a popular fishing site. Fishing from the bridge was closed in 1973 when the Yellowstone Cutthroat Trout population declined due to overfishing and the location of sensitive spawning grounds under the bridge.
- Yellowstone Cutthroat Trout are native to Yellowstone, living in rivers and lakes. Yellowstone Cutthroat Trout spend most of their time in the upper surface waters, making them easy prey and an important food source for more than 40 species in the Yellowstone ecosystem.
- Non-Native/Exotic Species migrate or are introduced accidentally or intentionally into an ecosystem.

Non-native Lake Trout prey upon the native Yellowstone Cutthroat Trout, threatening their survival and the survival of other wildlife who depend upon the Cutthroat Trout as a food source. Non-native Lake Trout do not make a good substitute since they spend most of their time in deeper water.

- Collectively, Yellowstone Lake and Yellowstone River contain the largest population of native Cutthroat Trout in the world.
- The Yellowstone River is the longest free-flowing river in the United States.
- The fires of 1988 burned thirty-six percent (793,880 acres) of Yellowstone National Park.
